A full plan to get back to the moon is to be presented in September by the National Space Council, with the goal of revisiting the lunar surface by the year 2024. The panel, along with the department’s acting administrator and the White House, agreed on the return-to-the-moon policy in a meeting last year. No one was more at odds, however, than the Trump administration and the space agency over how the United States should go about it. AD AD In typical fashion, Trump has gone back and forth with the agency on what the plan should be. On Friday, he threatened to order NASA to stay away from the moon. “I was never really thrilled with the whole Space Policy Directive 1,” Trump said, referring to a directive issued by former President Obama that urged NASA to send American astronauts back to the moon and on to Mars. “It was just all talk. But he was very firm that we’re going back to the moon.” During a news conference Wednesday, 55cdc1ed1c
